

RADICALS BOOST WAGE DEMANDS OF PORT STRIKERS

O'Connor Hears Agitators Are Trying to Split Union and Block Peace.

T. V. O'Connor, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, has started an investigation of a reported radical movement among some of the striking members to hold out for even greater wage increases than were demanded when the strike was called.

Pamphlets have been distributed, no one seems to know by whom, calling on the men to demand $1 an hour for the regular day's work and $1.50 for overtime. The demand when the strike was called was for 80 cents an hour and $1.20 overtime.

There was a report that the radicals would try to prevent the success of the meeting called for to-night at St. Veronica's Hall, Barrow and Washington Streets, where messengers from Gov. Smith are to submit the Governor's proposal to the men, a proposal that they go back to work at once and wait for a fair hearing of their complaints.

O'Connor believes that the agitators are all men outside the membership of the striking body, and he declared that none but members in good standing would be admitted to the meeting to-night.

The Governor's message will be presented by two representatives at a meeting of the longshoremen to-night in St. Veronica's Hall. The Merchants' Association held a meeting here yesterday but said no further statement would be made until after to-night's vote of the striking longshoremen. It was said, however, that plans for a $500,000 trucking fund continue, and that they would stand pat on the proposition of the coastwise steamship owners that there is nothing to arbitrate.

While the Governor has given no hint of the scope of his proposal, it is known to involve the immediate return of the men to work. The unions split their forces, T. V. O'Connor going to Washington to confer with officials of the United States Shipping Board with a view to getting that body to intervene, while Joseph F. Ryan, Vice President of the International Longshoremen, and Bernard Cavanaugh, a local organizer, went to Norfolk to lay the situation before the freight handlers there. John F. Riley, President of the Longshoremen's District Council, was in Boston on a similar errand.

In deciding to appeal to their associates in other ports, the union leaders are going on the theory that the best way to bring peace is to be prepared for war. Sources close to them to-day said there was small chance of strike orders issuing to the men in other ports at this time, but that the leaders felt, with the Merchants' Association proceeding with the plans for a finish fight, that it would be foolish not to prepare for any contingency.
